(a) i.e. for vegetables harvested during the agricultural year commencing 1.10.4 to 30.9.4

(b) Average wholesale market price during harvesting season and Govt. price in respect of controlled commodities (Taking into consideration the quantities sold during the harvest months at the highest and lowest prices and using your discretion in estimating the average).

(c) Delete which is not applicable.

(h) The destinations of all ships must be declared not less than 48 hours before the ship is opened for loading.

2. With regard to (a) members realised that in view of the present relative shortage of suitable tonnage at reasonable rates, it may be necessary to charter some steamers with a service speed of less than 12 knots. They considered that after a season's experience and after the shipping companies are given time to improve their tonnage, the regulations could be tightened up.

3. In connection with (b), members stressed that it was important that the trade in the United Kingdom should know that the citrus industry in Palestine is determined that there should be no repetition of what occurred last year; and that this regulation is most essential to ensure that ships should not be over-loaded and that they should be well ventilated, so as to reduce the heavy wastage which occurred last year.

GRADUATE CHEMISTS' CO-OPERATIVE
SOCIETY in Palestine,

108 Allenby Street, Tel-Aviv.

24th October, 1935.

Prof. I. Kligler,
Chairman,
The Committee on Organic Manure
of the Agricultural Council, Jerusalem.

Dear Sir,

In accordance with the request expressed by you on behalf of the Committee on Organic Manure we have the honour to submit to you herewith a summary of the statement made by our representatives at the meeting held on the 15th instant which dealt inter alia with the problem of utilizing seaweed for organic manuring purposes in Palestine.

2. From the questions put to us by the members of the Committee we understand that the Committee wants specific information without, however, requiring us to reveal that part of our investigation which we prefer to keep secret. We have therefore formulated that information as follows:

3. Harvesting.

Harvesting of seaweed will be effected

(a) on the seashore in places where it is thrown up by the sea, and

(b) in shallow and deep waters of the Mediterranean Sea along the coast of Palestine. Boats and special implements will have to be employed in deep waters.

4. Available quantities.

Our estimates of the approximate quantities which may be harvested were determined in the following manner:

(a) We inspected many of the larger areas where seaweeds occur and measured some of them in order to be able to approximate the available quantities. We also gathered quantities of algae and other seaweeds from smaller areas, weighed them in the

Remarks:

The field used for the experiment with fertilizers in 1921-22 had been "dry-farmed" in the course of the preceding summer, but had never been manured before. (It served for fertilizer experiment with Berseem - Trifolium alexandrinum - the following year).

In 1922-23 the experiment was performed on another unmanured field of exactly the same type of soil. This field had produced good crop of beans the previous year. The growth of the barley crop was excessive, lodging resulted early in the season, and the stand had to be mown twice before it headed out.

In 1923-24 the above-mentioned field which was used in 1921-22 for the fertilizer experiments with Barley and in 1922-23 for the experiments with Berseem was again used. This field had therefore been treated with the chemical fertilizers in question twice before in the course of the 2 years. It was consequently deemed inadvisable to apply fertilizer and manure again in 1923-24, for it was believed that they would produce no other than a harmful effect. The results of the year 1923-24 are therefore due to the cumulative effect of fertilizer and manure left over in the ground from applications of two preceding years.

The figures under the column "Average of Three Years" therefore represent results due to only two applications of fertilizers; be they chemical or organic.

The organic manure used in this experiment was but half way rotted.

No rainfall data are available for 1921-22 and 1922-23. The record for 1923-24 was 442 mm at Yavneel. This quantity was rather well distributed in the course of the months of December, January, February and March. As may be judged from the yields of the unmanured plots, the other two years were at least as rainy. Indeed those years constituted part of the rainy cycle which preceded the present dry one.

(b) A comprehensive series of experiments should be conducted for the purpose of determining the most suitable times and the most suitable methods for harvesting the seaweeds. This phase of investigation work will require the purchase and/or hire of boats and implements and engaging water experienced personnel.

(c) A comprehensive series of experiments should be conducted for the purpose of determining the least expensive and the most efficient processes for converting the raw material into the most valuable forms of the final product. This phase of the investigation will necessitate the establishment of a small experimental factory.

(d) A comprehensive series of experiments should be conducted for the purpose of determining the forms of the final product best adapted to the various manural needs of the various branches of the country's agriculture.

8. The Value of the Seaweed Manure.

The use of seaweed as manure is not novel. It is well known in that form in many places on the coast of the British Isles and is also used to advantage for the same purpose in Bretagne (France), Japan, and other countries. In addition to its manurial value which is due to its fertilizer constituents, e.g. nitrogen, phosphoric acid and potash it has particularly important value for Palestine as a new and adequate source of organic matter.

When the organic matter of the seaweed is freed of chlorine and is properly fermented it can be converted into a manure possessing all the valuable properties inherent in natural stable manure; and it may therefore be substituted for farm-yard manure.

During the Great War diminution of live stock in Great Britain resulted in organic manure shortage, which was temporarily overcome by the development by Rothamsted Experimental Station of (d) Halogens.

The analyses of 15 unwashed wet samples taken partly from the seashore and partly from the sea revealed the following halogen percentages:

|                |             |
|----------------|-------------|
| Chlorine ..... | 2.5 - 8%    |
| Bromine .....  | 0.04 - 0.7% |
| Iodine .....   | 0.02 - 0.1% |

By washing the seaweeds with certain reagents, the total halogen content was reduced to 0.05 - 0.09% (calculated as chlorine).

6. Prices.

At the present stage of our work we are naturally unable to furnish an accurate estimate of the cost of production of seaweed manure. According to our carefully prepared tentative estimate the cost should be from 350 to 450 mils per ton seaweed manure (with 20 - 30% moisture content). This estimate includes ample margin for contingencies; the actual cost may be somewhat lower.

On the basis of a 350 - 450 mils production cost it should be possible to offer the product to the consumer at a price of 500 - 600 mils per ton.

7. Investigations.

In addition to the preliminary survey and laboratory work which we conducted further detailed investigation along the following lines is necessary:

(*) A comprehensive study should be made of the sea and its bottom with particular reference to the various species of the existing seaweeds near the Palestinian coast, their life histories and speed of growth after cutting. Such information is of prime importance for scientific large-scale use of seaweed for organic manuring purposes.

PROPOSED LEGISLATION PRESCRIBING MINIMUM STANDARDS FOR SHIPS CARRYING CITRUS FRUIT FROM PALESTINE.

1. (a) The Committee considers a speed of 12 service knots to be the minimum requirement for the citrus industry, but in view of present shipping difficulties and late notice (to the trade), the minimum speed of ships for 1937/38 season should be 10 service knots.

(b) Citrus fruit should not be stacked to a height equivalent to more than 13 tiers of cases placed on their sides, nor should citrus be stacked without dunnage measuring in section about 5 x 6 cms. between the bottom of the hold or the floor of the 'tween decks and the lowest tier of cases, and dunnage of about 1.5 x 2 cms. between tiers.

(c) That the engine or boiler room bulk head should be insulated in a manner to avoid heating of the fruit in the adjoining hold or 'tween decks.

(d) That steam pipes going through the holds or 'tween decks should be insulated; and hatch coamings should not be loaded.

(e) No citrus fruits are to be carried as deck cargoes.

(f) No bottom cargo should be carried which is liable to damage or otherwise affect the condition of the fruit, it being understood that a schedule of bottom cargoes which are liable to damage or otherwise affect the condition of the fruit, should be published in advance, and amended from time to time as considered necessary.

(g) No ship shall be allowed to load for more than four weather working days and under no circumstances shall the period of time between the first commencement of loading and final date of sailing exceed seven days.
